A Letter to All Parents

ASSIDUOUS parents,
I am grateful for your endless hard work in helping the Universe raise and educate your children. You have devoted the essence of your life to provide endless love and care for your children only in hopes for them to grow, live life safely, and one day become successful men and women. I cannot begin to describe your great merits and contributions, they are too admirable for words.

As children grow and prepare to attend high school or college, many parents neglect the importance of their moral education. Family education or upbringing have already started to become unpopular and forgotten amongst many families, not to mention moral education. It is worse that there is lack of acknowledgement of the importance of a child's complete education and future societal behaviors. In the past few years, we have often seen absurd and unacceptable behaviors in the young generation on television or in public, which made me realize it is time we think of a new method of educating our children.

You may use work as an excuse. You are constantly busy and lack sufficient time to enjoy life, not to mention educating your children. I understand that many parents work long hours to support their family, but as long as you desire, you do have the opportunity to receive the Universe's blessings to help you improve in various ways. Not only does this solve daily problems, it may also free up valuable time for you to spend with your family and educate your children to better the next generation. When you truly immerse yourself into teaching you children, you may also benefit from that bond you build with your children, for example, by furthering your own moral understanding. As the Chinese like to say, “It is like hitting two birds with one stone.”

When you practice these core methods of the Universe, your knowledge will be refreshed and your ability to interact with your children will also benefit from these teachings. The Universe values a child’s education and praises parents who make the effort. If you have the heart, you will receive blessings from the Universe. Do your best, and leave the rest to the Universe. As a parent, you must responsibly complete your duties to the best of your abilities and leave the rest to be smoothed out by destiny and the Universe. In any case where you see responsibilities, you must act with a sincere heart, where you cannot see responsibilities, you must respond with a sincere heart. When you have well educated your children, you will feel endless self-pride and wisdom.

You must also know that over-worrying about your children may cause stress and negative energy in them; it may not have been your intension, but your negative energy will have an impact on their growth and advancements. When you can let go and embrace the Universe, you will know how great and rich the blessings of the Universe are and appreciate your rich possessions. Your children will benefit from your happiness as well.

From today forward, your bond with your children will be closer because when you have made the decision, what you have is not just what you can hold in your hands, but the blessings of the entire Universe. You will encounter fortunes after fortunes, and become more capable parents.

Sincerely,

Great Sun
